Look at an atlas and you will see that New Zealand and Argentina are the closest countries to Antarctica. 1 _____ New Zealand's best known one left from port Lyttelton near to Christchurch in 1911. It was the Robert Falcon Scott expedition, and tragically the explorers died on their return journey.

Both New Zealand and America maintain research bases in Antarctica: New Zealand's is called Scott Base, name after Sir Robert. In the 1950s and 60s America ran a massive operation called "Deep Freeze". The Americans made a tremendous impact on Christchurch, the site of their base. They also found the New Zealand maidens attractive! Quite a few brides returned with them to America. Christchurch is still the launching pad for Antarctic exploration. 2 _____ but occasionally a brave crew has to risk a winter flight in response to a medical emergency.

There have been memorable times for New Zealand in Antarctica: particularly the exploits of Sir Edmund Hillary, who the world had acknowledged in 1953 as the first climber, with Serpa Tensing, to conquer Mount Everest. 3 _____ on the first overland crossing of Antarctica, via the South Pole (1958). Christchurch museum has mementos of this and other Antarctic exploits. There is now a first class Antarctic Centre which tourists enjoy, hard by Christchurch airport. 4 _____ . Displays include snow chambers and live penguins. Brrrrr! Tourists revel in it.

Isolation from the Northern Hemisphere is a challenge for our folk in the antipodes. It's a twenty-four hour flight to Europe. After completing their tertiary education young people often journey on their O.E. - Overseas Experience. They go to Britain, America, Central Europe, and the Mediterranean. Many have appreciated Polish hospitality. A pilgrimage to Auschwitz is a high priority, followed by the delights of Krakow. 5 _____ where beauty and cruelty vie with each other!

- A Flights cease during winter, of course,
- B. Famous explorations flew from Christchurch.
- C. What a fascinating and challenging world we inhabit,
- D. It has two runaways.
- E. Famous explorations in the twentieth century sailed from both countries.
- F. Brilliantly he and his team drove tractors (modified farm machines)
- G. It boasts rooms where you experience the sights and sounds of Antarctica.
