The 2016 Olympic Games didn't fascinate me as much as the Para Olympics. The latter inspired me. Considering the mountainous obstacles those athletes have conquered their achievement is nothing short of incredible. If you have ever broken a finger, especially one on the hand you write with, you will know how awkward your world has suddenly become. On a vastly higher scale, to lose a limb, any limb, and persist with competitive sport, whether at the Olympics or at the local sports ground, deserves high commendation.

My mother had one leg surgically stiffened. That cut out the high-jumping and the rounders (a game akin to baseball) she had excelled at. When she experimented with swimming she couldn't achieve forward momentum, but persisted in going round in circles! Consequently, when I watched an athlete competing in the pool with but one arm and stumpy legs I was profoundly moved. Try yourself to swim with one arm and have your legs strapped together too. It's a herculean task.

There's a multiplicity of experiments which can serve to increase our appreciation of para-Olympians' achievements. I've sat in a chair and attempted to throw a heavy circle of wood as a discus. It was poor effort. So too were my endeavours with a stick for a javelin and a boot for a shot. Once again it's a salute to the genuine wheel-chair athletes. Likewise with those who have impaired vision and go in cycle races, putting their trust in another fallible human.

Most impressive and encouraging of all is the boost these athletes give to others among the wider public who have crippling disadvantages in life. They need not submit to being defeated by their handicaps: there is hope that they can still lead a fulfilling, enjoyable, and useful life. Nothing is insurmountable for a determined person. One wonders how we would cope in similar circumstances?

The pictures of the destruction of Aleppo have 0C..... back bad memories to those who 1 the horrors of bombing in the last World War. Lovely buildings were 2 in seconds, water mains were severed, fires raged everywhere, acrid smoke got into people's lungs causing them to 3 and choke. More tragic was the effect on citizens: some were killed, others maimed, and the psychological trauma began which many people never lost. All this has been 4 in Aleppo's sufferings.

Is there hope for Aleppo in the 5? Yes, there is always hope; the people of Poland have shown what can be done with goodwill and hard work. Warsaw stands today as a 6 example of recovery. It took a long time, but with determination the people of that 7 achieved their goal.

Aleppo, though, has 8 disadvantages in that there are still 9 factions among the Syrian people. The chances of cooperation are 10..... And there is the constant threat of militants from other countries. However, when Poland faced its problems it was more united, though there was not much aid available from overseas because those countries themselves had been 11 Nevertheless, the result of Poland's recovery should give 12 to those who will want to return to Aleppo
